The Lap of Lechery -- II

She protested, "I've had quite enough
Of this back seat necking and stuff --
If he tries to begin it,
I'll walk in a minute,
Or a minute, perhaps, and a huff."

She had a quaint notion of fun:
When my preludes to romance were done,
And I asked her, "sweet miss,
Would you give me a kiss?"
She said, "No, but I'll lend you one."

"I'm sorry," she said with a pout,
"But I don't want to leave any doubt.
You can beg, you can plead--
I know just what you need.
But unbridled romance is out."

For one who was feeling bereft,
I would say his rejoinder was deft:
"I'm saving my kiss
For the one-eyed miss
(The one I'd miss most if she left)."

All my married life, I've been aspiring:
When my wife became 40 (and tiring)
Two 20's would do --
But I have aged, too,
And 220's too much for my wiring.

At the neighborhood burlycue,
An ecdysiast made her debut:
I'd like to have viewed
The lass in the nude,

But she only unties a shoe.
