Old Dog/New Tricks

Teresa Gregory, Editor

Greetings from Los Angeles! I flew out on Wednesday and will board the train home Sunday night. Yes, this is the trip I was supposed to take in May but canceled due to strep throat.

I told my son, Jack, that I didn't want him to plan a bunch of touristy trips. I mostly wanted to see him and just relax. I did ask to see two things, though: the Hollywood Police Station and some thrift stores. I read a lot of mysteries, and one of my favorite authors, Michael Connelly, uses the Hollywood Station in his books. The other? I just like thrift stores.

The weather has been perfect (it was over 100 degrees just a few weeks ago) We dined several times around his neighborhood. Saturday night we went to a birthday party for one of his friends. I enjoyed meeting people I had only seen in Facebook pictures. I also met his "gal-pal" (his words).

Sunday night, the train leaves Union Station at 10:00pm. I am scheduled to arrive home around 7:35pm Wednesday. I'll let you know how that goes.

Friday and Saturday, September 8 and 9, Jan Pfeil Doyle and I met with five others from out of town to do a site visit to the 2018 AG hotel downtown. We inspected the meeting rooms and one of the suits. We had numerous lengthy discussions with the group itself and with some of the individuals separately. We are fired up and ready to move forward. Registrations open November 1. More on that next month.

Don't forget: half-price testing in October. You know you have friends who should be members. Now is the time!

Introducing the Mensa Voucher Program –

If you know someone you think might be interested in joining Mensa, here's an opportunity to help them find out if they qualify for free. Each member will receive, via email, a discount code to be given to a non-member who may, at no cost, either submit prior evidence or sit for a supervised test. (We have tests scheduled on Oct. 7th, Oct. 21st, and Nov. 12 in the greater Indianapolis area. Contact Testing Coordinator Karen Zwick for testing in other areas.)

The program runs from Oct. 1, 2017 until March 31, 2018. The discount code must be entered/provided by the non-member at the time of purchase to receive the discount. A contest, running from Oct. 1 through Jan. 31, 2018, will give members and local groups an incentive to redeem their discount codes. Each time a discount code is redeemed, that local group will receive an entry into a drawing. At the end of January, there will be a drawing and $500 will be added to the funding of the winning local group. More info can be found at www.us.mensa.org/featured-content/introducing-the-mensa-voucher-program/

Half Price Mensa Testing in October – If you've already given your voucher away, let others know that the price of taking the Mensa test in October will be just $30. We have tests scheduled on Oct. 7th and 21st in the Indianapolis area. See the calendar or our website www.indymensa.org for details.

Annual Gathering 2018 Update – Continuing the countdown of “Top Ten Reasons to Come to the AG in Indy” - Reason #7: Indy's Easy! Getting to Indy is easy. We're the Crossroads of America with great Interstate highway connections and Megabus service. Once you're here, getting around Indy is easy, too, with $5 downtown taxis, and on-the-street bike and electric car rentals. Downtown Indy is also very walkable—there's so much to see and do right outside the hotel door.

Registration and hotel reservations open Nov. 1 at ag.us.mensa.org

HalloweeM – Chicago Area Mensa's Regional Gathering is coming up October 26-29. You can find more details or register at www.chicago.us.mensa.org/weem/

A Total Eclipse of Mensans

On August 21, twelve Mensans traveled by bus to Princeton, Kentucky, to view The Great American Eclipse. This trip was arranged through the Link Observatory. Here is a picture and some comments:

From Nan Harvey:

The sky appeared grayed out instead of the black I had expected. It made an interesting backdrop for the corona. I was so focused on the visual that I forgot to pay attention to the sounds. In fact I forgot to breathe for several seconds. I guess I should describe it as literally breathtaking.

From Kurt Williams

What I remember was looking at totality and being amazed at how beautiful the corona was, the huge prominence that could be seen with the naked eye, the sunlight hitting the fields on the horizon outside the shadow, Jupiter, Venus and Mercury being visible in the daytime sky, and the surreal environment created by the dance of the cosmos.

From Teresa Fisher

From Larry Marcus

In totality, the corona is awesome. One of the rarest sights you will see in your life! My thought afterwards was to name it in honor of a great scientist and call that phenomenon "Einstein's Hair." I should explain that the connection of Einstein to an eclipse was my thinking of Eddington's first test of general relativity during a total eclipse (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Tests_of_general_relativity). It showed that Einstein's prediction of the deflection of light by the sun was predicted correctly by his theory of general relativity of 1915.

We have Bailey's Beads, why not Einstein's hair for the corona?

From Patricia Graft

When I learned about the bus trip that Link was planning, I asked my husband, Charlie Graft, if he would like the trip as his 74th birthday present. He loved the idea. Always a challenge to find a unique gift, and a trip to see a total eclipse was perfect.

After we experienced viewing the total eclipse with all the others that had travelled with Link Observatory, I inquired what Charlie thought of his birthday gift? "It was spectacular. I had seen a partial eclipse before. Seeing a total is like comparing hand held sparklers to a big Four of July fireworks display" He was grinning from ear to ear. We are thankful to Link for hosting this trip, made a great gift and wonderful memories.

From Charles Graft

Eclipse day was an interesting day. As it was also my birthday, (any astrologers see any significance to that?) it worked out that Patricia offered the trip as my birthday present.

The total eclipse was awesome!!! The difference between the partial and the total was the difference between lightning and a lightning bug. Awesome!!

From Alison Brown

Totality is indeed wonderful. The waning light leading up to the eclipse is very interesting. The holes in my straw hat served as pinhole cameras projecting on my belly when I looked down. No shadow bands, no birds to stop singing, although a few did fly around in confusion. The crickets did sing loudly in the trees around our parking lot. The sky was not dark, a thin cover of cirrus clouds diffused light (the official explanation was diffusion from the much darker tree leaves), so only two planets were visible. When I finally got to cast a glance through the solar telescope after totality, I even saw a solar flare or prominence!

From Jan Pfeil Doyle

Impressions of the solar eclipse – (1) It was a truly amazing event that I'll remember forever. I'm so glad Kurt Williams organized the trip and that I got to experience it with fellow Mensans. (2) It didn't get as dark as I thought it would, both leading up to and during totality. Even when the sun was almost completely (95% or more) covered by the moon, things seemed as bright as a normal sunny day. The quality of the light was different in a way that's hard to describe, but it was still bright. I guess that shows the unbelievable power we get from the sun every day. During totality, it did get quite dark, but it was still light enough to see around easily. I would say it was brighter than a full moon. Totality was eerie, in a way that's also hard to describe. (4) Looking at the sun with bare eyes for the 2 minutes and 30 seconds of totality and seeing the corona was incredible. (5) I can't wait until 2024 when the path of totality goes through Indianapolis!

From Karen Zwick

I'm so grateful that the Link Observatory provided this opportunity to experience the total eclipse. It was an excellent adventure. Thanks to the Link Observatory team.

Friends and family have asked about my eclipse experience. When I attempt to explain what I experienced and how I felt, my words feel totally inadequate.

There is no comparison between a partial eclipse and totality. The totality experience was thrilling, beautiful, awe-inspiring, and emotionally overwhelming. I encourage everyone who did not experience totality to set aside April 8, 2024, the date of our next total solar eclipse.

From Teresa Gregory

This was an experience like none. I had seen partial eclipses as a child looking through stacks of old photo negatives. I've seen the many photos throughout my life of the sun during totality. None of that prepared me for what I saw. Looking through my special NASA-approved glasses, I watched the sun disappear. Then there was nothing. As I removed my glasses, I heard a collective gasp from my fellow eclipse viewers. I was not prepared for the most beautiful pale cornflower blue color in the sky. With the wispy clouds around the sun, it had a lovely watercolor effect. The corona, also very pale, surrounded a dense black disc. The contrast was extreme and breathtaking. I was there with some of my favorite people which made the whole event even more special.

Ham 'n' Eggers Party After the Party

Alison Brown

We had so much fun at Ham'n Eggs on Saturday that we decided to extend the event to Monday afternoon at Alison's. Left to right, Matt Brennan, Alison Brown, Dave Appel, Bob Zdanky and Larry Marcus. Alison's friend, Ann Gardiner took the photograph. Everyone contributed to the feast. Alison provided baked potatoes, tossed salad, wine and fruit juices, Matt came with corn and multitudinous desserts, Dave grilled homemade sourdough flatbread, Bob came with flowers and potato salad, Ann added corn chips to nibble beforehand and eggnog ice cream to close the meal, and Larry spoiled us with ribeye steak. The party broke up after 4.5 hours, mostly because Alison had to go to work (this being Labor Day).

Jon's Journal – News for Region 4

By Jon Gruebele, RVC4

Two months ago, my column discussed surveys of current Mensa members. I was asked: “Do we also survey lapsed members about why they don’t renew?” Indeed we do, and the results can help guide our efforts to deliver a better member experience.

The 2016 lapsed member survey got about a 10% response rate. Done in mid-May, it asked 15 questions and took about 6 minutes. The respondents’ answers were quite similar to the 2015 survey. Here are some of the findings:

12% of lapsed members said they planned to renew; 40% had not yet decided. A sizeable minority (43%) of the undecided members had only been members 1-3 years. Outreach to lapsed members might encourage renewals.

About half of lapsed members reported they had lapsed before, so many may rejoin later.

Lapsed members are less involved with Mensa across the board. Only 54% read the Bulletin versus 95% of current members. Only half participated in any activities at all.

About half reported something about Mensa did not meet their expectations. Reasons cited included dues too high for the value received (64%), unappealing local group activities (51%), lack of local group activities (48%), local group activities too far away (39%), and negative experiences with other Mensans (19% in person and 13% on-line). Newer members also mentioned not having anyone their own age, local events limited to dinners out, not being contacted by the local group, and not being welcomed by other members. Others reported challenges such as changes in their financial situation.

When asked “What is one thing Mensa could do that might encourage you to renew in the future?”, respondents suggested holding a wider variety of activities including those that help cultivate our minds. They also recommended getting better at welcoming new members, lower dues / better value, and somehow addressing negative member interactions.

At every level, we should continue to improve our member experience. As a board (AMC) member, I will champion fiscal discipline to keep dues from increasing as long as possible. At the local group level, we can all get better at welcoming new members. If you go to a meeting and find someone sitting alone, chat with them for a few minutes. Anyone can host an activity, from a trip to a museum, a dinner theater, a minor league baseball game, or a walk in the woods. Let’s get creative!

Books On the Runway

An Open Invitation to All MIND Readers

Margy Lancet Fletcher

Folks:

I am currently in a residential transitional stage. My husband and I are currently working with a realtor to sell our condominium in Noblesville as soon as possible; thus, my permanent move to our residence in Tipton, Indiana, should occur in the near future. Consequently, due to the complex property transferal and documentation processes involved, the time available to write and submit monthly articles will be limited for the next few months.

Therefore, I am soliciting assistance from other MIND readers (with or without extrasensory perception - chuckle) who love books as much as I do. Is there an impressive book that you’ve read recently or a favorite volume from your past experience that you would like to recommend to other Mensans? It can represent any genre, fiction or factual, as long as you feel that it meets the high literary standards of Mensa. Also, you are not required to adhere to my usual Books on the Runway format or expound for two full pages; a short and to-the-point paragraph or two will suffice. Indeed, a group of brief reading suggestions could be compiled into a Reader’s Forum, in lieu of or in addition to Books on the Runway. I will continue to submit my articles as my schedule permits, as I find this task fulfilling, but I feel that we would all benefit if other bibliophilic voices are heard.

I thank you very much for your continual support, and hope that some of you are willing and able to share some quality literature with the rest of us. I'll be back very soon.

Sincerely,
Margy

Anyone can submit a review The form she uses is not necessary unless you choose to use it. (In other words, don't let that prevent you from submitting something.)
